

LIGNY 1815 MUSEUM

Ligny 1815 Museum

The Ligny 1815 Museum takes visitors on an interactive and immersive tour to find out more about the Napoleonic Wars and, more specifically, the 1815 campaign in Belgium.

With a rich collection of period objects and an attractive scenography, it retraces the daily life of the soldiers plunged into the hell of the battle of 16 June 1815 at Ligny and evokes the fate and resilience of the village community.

In Ligny, a man fell every second of the day

In Ligny, a peaceful village of 900 inhabitants, on 16 June 1815, two armies faced each other: Blücher's Prussian army, with its 87,000 men and 216 cannons, and Napoleon's French army, with its 65,000 men and 240 cannons.

For six hours, fierce fighting took place in the streets, gardens and houses of the village. By the end of the day, Ligny was in flames and thousands of corpses littered the battlefield.
